

5 QUESTIONS TO ASK

your contractor about your bathroom remodel

Beginning a bathroom-renovation project is no easy task. If it's a big job, you'll likely have multiple people involved, from contractors to vendors and workers. Here are some questions to ask your contractor before getting started to ensure a smooth remodel process:

What materials will be used?

It's important to know exactly where your renovation materials are coming from. Take ownership of the project just as your contractor will, and make sure you have an understanding of the types of products being installed in your home so you can ensure they are high quality, easy to maintain and durable.

How will we communicate during the project?

Communication is key during any remodeling project, and everyone involved should be on the same page. Talk with your contractor about communication expectations and how phone calls and emails will be handled.

How long will this last?

If you're investing your hard-earned money into a renovation project, you want to make sure it will last. Some bathroom materials, like tile, begin to break down over the years and will date themselves. Talk to your contractor to get his opinion regarding which products are the most effective.

What will the up-keep be like?

Are you going to have to fix the grout on tiles? Fill in cracks and joints? Avoid future headaches by talking with your contractor about the expected maintenance for this bathroom renovation.

How long will this project take?

Ask about the project's scope. Long, time-consuming installation processes are inconvenient for all parties involved. It is a disruption of the homeowner's daily life, for starters. To avoid any conflicts, maintain open communication throughout the entire project.
